Department of Historical Studies

The Department of Historical Studies at the University of Cape Town invites applications for its MA/MSocSc in History by coursework. This innovative programme focuses on the historical interpretation and analysis of public culture. Students will choose from an array of courses, conduct independent research in a supportive environment, and work closely with the Department's staff as well as practitioners, activists, and experts in order to produce work that has direct impact and application outside of the university.

How is the degree structured?

This is a two-year programme. The curriculum consists of one compulsory core course, three elective courses chosen from a broad range of options, and a minor dissertation. The dissertation, on a topic of students' choosing, need not follow a conventional format. The research outputs may range from developing history apps to composing new history curricula, from creating graphic history books to making podcasts for the public, from transcribing and critically annotating oral community narratives to curating exhibitions, and so on. All will conform to UCT's vigorous standards of evaluation, but will have the potential to reach a broader audience beyond the campus. The programme is particularly supportive of projects that develop skills and research expertise in historically disadvantaged African-language archives.

Who should apply?

The MA/MSoc is aimed at those who have recently completed Honours in history and related disciplines, as well as those would like to acquire historical research skills and familiarity with trends within the field. Rights activists, media employees, creative and performance artists, heritage and tourism personnel, genealogists, commissioned researchers, filmmakers, nonfiction writers, among others, are strongly encouraged to apply. Students need not have elaborate previous academic training as historians.

Is there funding available?

UCT offers a range of competitive scholarships. Click here for further information. The Department will also offer three History Access Master's fellowships in 2020. Applications close 31 October. To apply, go to <http://applyonline.uct.ac.za/>. Please notify us when you apply so we can expedite the processing of your application.
